Let's Start!

To grow or not to grow ... that is the question!

Learning Outcome

Express duty, advice, willingness, or intention to do something in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Have you ever heard of the GROW model? What do you think it is about?
- What do you think the GROW in the GROW model stands for?

Can Do Statements

- I can express willingness or intention to do something.
- I can report about the purpose of events or actions related to job issues.
- I can talk about models in coaching.

Let's Explore!

What are the four stages of the GROW model? How does this model help you to achieve your goals?

* "To achieve" means to successfully complete something by working hard.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Professional coaching is a process of communication between a trained expert, or "coach", and a business executive, or "coachee". It is a popular way of improving business performance. The GROW model describes four key areas to explore. At each stage, the coach will ask relevant open questions. Each question forces the coachee to reflect deeply, achieve a better understanding of the situation in question, and start to identify some potential solutions.

Stage one - Goal: At this stage, the coach's questions are designed to help the coachee establish an appropriate objective. The coach might ask some or all of the following questions: What do you want to achieve? How do you feel this process will help you? What do you think it will take for this process to be a success?

Stage two - Reality: This stage of the coaching process helps the coachee to understand their present reality and think about their objective in the context of the real world. Questions from the coach might include: What challenges or obstacles do you expect to encounter? How will you overcome them?

Stage three - Options: The coach will help the coachee explore the options that are available to them. Questions might include: What options are available to you? What are the pros and cons of each option?

Stage four - Will/Way forward: In the final stage of the this model, the coach will ask questions that help the coachee identify action points and establish their willingness to put these actions into practice and move towards their goal. Questions might include: How do you intend to put your chosen options into action? What does achieving your goal mean to you?

The GROW model establishes a framework for coaches to help coachees identify an objective, achieve a deeper understanding of the situation they face, explore the options that are available to them and identify an appropriate way forward. By asking open questions at each stage of the framework, the coach will facilitate, rather than direct, the conversation and, in doing so, will enable the coachee to arrive at their own conclusions.

Let's Practice!

Are you willing to change?

Instructions: Use the options from the Word Bank to correctly complete the sentences. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

Extension Activity

Create a GROW model poster.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Work with a partner. One person is the coach and the other the coachee.
- Do the GROW model process and put your ideas on a poster.
- GOAL: Decide on a goal. Goals need to be SMART (specific, measurable, acceptable, realistic, timely).
- REALITY: Self-evaluate and identify the obstacles in your path.
- OPTIONS: Brainstorm ideas that can help solve your problems.
- WILL: Establish what is necessary to achieve your goals.
- Switch roles with your partner.
- Next, present your posters to the class.

e.g. They should think about their objective in the context of the real world.
- action point (noun): a specific reason for action to be taken, typically one arising from a meeting
e.g. The final stage of the this model is for the coach to ask the coachee questions that will help them identify some action points.
- put something into practice (expression): start to use it and see if it is effective e.g. It is important to establish their willingness to put these actions into practice and move towards their goal.

Learning Points

Purpose Clauses including To-Infinitives

The most common way for you to express purpose is to use a to-infinitive (called an infinitive of purpose).

You use to-infinitive (within a reason clause) especially when you want to express one particular purpose.

For example:

I called to find out if she was still there.

Ben has gone into the city to do some research.

To get a good seat, you need to book ahead.

I'm writing to enquire about the availability of your staff.

Examples:

- At this stage, the coach's questions are designed to help the coachee establish an appropriate objective.
- This stage of the coaching conversation is all about helping the coachee to understand their present situation and to think about their objective in the context of the real world.
- The GROW model describes four key areas to explore.

Learning Points

Expressing Intention and Willingness: Will and Would

When you want to express intention to do something or a willingness to do something, you can use the verbs will and would.

Will / Won't

You use will / won't to express that someone is / is not willing to do something in the present.

Examples:

Richard is a nice guy. He will always help you if you are in trouble.

Fernanda is mad at me; she will not (won't) talk to me.

Would / Would not

You use would / wouldn't to express that someone was / was not willing to do something in the past.

Examples:

My grandpa was such a nice man; he would always help people if they were in need.

My teacher always helped me with unknown words, but he wouldn't translate the whole text.

More examples:

Mary will translate for you - she speaks French. (willingness)

I ll do it - I don't mind. (willingness)

I won't be coming later. (intention)

Would you mind helping me, please? (willingness)*

I ll call you later. (intention)

Read the examples from the text. Keep the context in mind as you do.

Examples:

- At each stage, the coach will ask relevant open questions.
- These questions will encourage the coachee to reflect deeply.
- How do you feel this process will help you?
- The coach will help the coachee explore the options that are available to them.
