Let's Start!

Pronunciation Spot: Could you repeat that?

Learning Outcome

Express duty, advice, willingness, or intention to do something in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- How do you give someone feedback?
- What do you think is important when giving feedback? Should you focus on the positives or the negatives? Why?

Can Do Statements

- I can claim, mention, request, or point out an idea, thing, or issue in the workplace environment.
- I can discuss reasons and results of an event or action related to work and jobs.
- I can distinguish among spelling, pronunciation and meanings of words.

Let's Explore!

What's in question?

* The thing "in question" is the person or thing that is being discussed.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Giving Effective Feedback

- When giving feedback, acknowledge and focus on a person's behavior rather than on their personality. Address the specific behavior clearly, and then, explain your feelings about it. End with a comment stating what you expect from them after this. This model helps pinpoint behavior instead of making assumptions. For example, say, "I haven't seen you at our board meetings lately. I'm worried that you are missing important information. Can we meet soon to discuss it?" rather than, "You obviously don't think our board meetings are important!"
- Balance the content. Use the "sandwich approach". First, you should focus on specific strengths, giving reinforcement to positive behavior and identifying exactly what the recipient ought to do. Then, point out particular things that need to be worked on and improved while you also offer solutions for change. You should always conclude with a positive point. For example: "Your speech was great. You made good eye contact and were well prepared. You were a little hard to hear at the back of the room, but with some practice you can overcome this. Keep up the good work!", instead of, "You didn't speak loudly enough, but otherwise the speech went well."
- Be specific. Don't make general comments as they are often of very limited use to the receiver. Give examples and alternatives that the receiver can use, but let them figure out how to use your feedback. This is better than just giving advice.
- Be realistic. Don't waste time giving feedback on things that cannot be controlled or changed. Recipients feel empowered when they believe they have some control and can find their own solutions.

Let's Practice!

Let's talk about feedback!

Instructions: Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1. Address the behavior, not the person.
2. Please make sure your mailing address is up to date.
3. Look alert, you don't want to be seen as being bored.
4. I haven't seen you at our board meetings lately.
5. Please, don't cause a scene if you don't agree!
6. You obviously don't think our board meetings are important!
7. Balance the content when speaking.
8. Everyone will be content to sit and listen if you are quick and stay on point.
9. Then identify specific areas for improvement.
10. One hour, rather than four, is a good meeting length.
11. Do have the work done by noon on the day it's due.

Let's Practice!

Vocabulary to help you give feedback.

Instructions: Use the words from the Word Bank to correctly complete the sentences.

Extension Activity

Give feedback on a presentation!

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Get into groups of 3 or 4 people.
- Each person gets a topic about business on a card.
- Each group member must give a 1 minute presentation to the group about the topic.
- One person will record the presentation on the speaker's phone; another will keep time.
- After an individual presentation, the group members will give balanced and specific feedback using the sandwich technique.
- After, the speaker should review their presentation on their phone and write feedback for themselves.
- Feedback should be about 100 words.

Self-Assessment

Yes No

I make a presentation.

Homonyms, Homophones and Heteronyms

Homonyms are two or more words that have the same spelling, or the same pronunciation, or both, but have different meanings. It is an umbrella term that includes other types of words like homophones and heteronyms.

Homophones are two or more words that have the same pronunciation but have different meanings and they may or may not be spelled the same way.

For example:

present and (to) present

Heteronyms have the same spelling but different pronunciation.

For example:

present /prezənt/ - When it has the stress on the first syllable, it means something presented. In the other context, it means "a gift".

Example: I was present at the concert.

She gave me a present.

(to) present /pri'zent/: As a verb, it means to formally talk about something.

Example: I need to present my dissertation tomorrow.

Read these words aloud: Are they homophones or heteronyms?

site , sight

Look at these examples from the text:

Address the specific behavior clearly.

Write down your address.

They have some control and can find their own solutions.

You can control the situation.

Now, read these sentences aloud, focusing on the correct pronunciation of the homophones:

Examples:

- Look alert, you don't want to come off as being bored.
- I haven't seen you at our board meetings lately.
- He was seen causing a scene at the party!
- Balance the content when speaking.
- Stay content, don't get upset.

Reported Speech and Questions

You use reported speech (indirect speech) when you are saying (reporting) what other people said or asked.

When you want to report questions, you usually use the following verbs:
ask - want to know - inquire.

How to report Yes/No questions

When you report yes/no questions, you use "if" or "whether".

Example:

Direct Question

Richard: "Do you have a car?"

Reported Question

He asked me if I had a car.

How to report questions with a question word such as what, where, etc.

Direct Question

Camila: "What time does the class start?"

Tomas: "Why are you crying?"

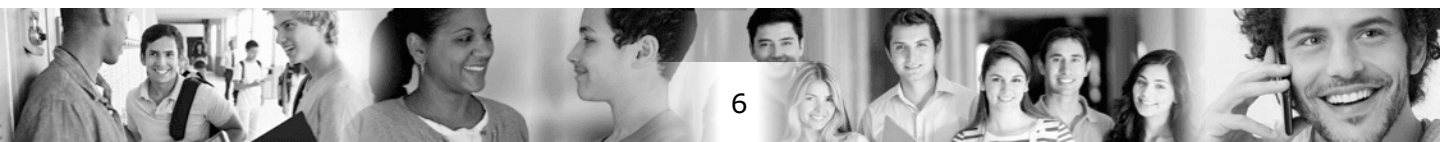

Reported Question

She asked me what time the class started.

He wanted to know why I was crying.

Remember to change the tense of the verbs to reflect what it is going to be reported.
Take a look at the chart.

Direct Question	Reported Question
Present Simple Maria: "Are you ok?"	Past Simple She asked if I was ok.
Present Continuous Ronald: "Are you doing the homework?"	Past Continuous He asked me if I was doing the homework.
Past Simple Richard: "Did you close the door?"	Past Perfect He asked me if I had closed the door.
Present Perfect Sonia: "Have you been to Europe?"	Past Perfect She wanted to know if I had been to Europe.
Past Continuous Carlos: "Were you playing at the park?"	Past Perfect Continuous He asked me if I had been playing at the park.

Learning Points

Can Ronald: "Can you do me a favor?"	Could He asked if I could do him a favor.
Will Fernanda: "Will you come to the party?"	Would She asked me if I would come to the party.

Look at the examples of direct speech from the text. Can you read them as reported speech?

Examples:

- "I haven't seen you at our board meetings lately. I'm worried that you are missing important information. Can we meet soon to discuss it?"
- "You obviously don't think our board meetings are important!"
