Let's Start!

How many different styles are there?

Learning Outcome

Express duty, advice, willingness, or intention to do something in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- What do you think some of the different management styles are?
- What do you think it takes to be a good manager?

Can Do Statements

- I can claim, mention, request, or point out an idea, thing, or issue in the workplace environment.
- I can express duty and advice related to work and job issues.
- I can talk about management styles.

Let's Explore!

What are the four different management styles?

* A "management style" is the method of leadership used by a manager.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

In any organization, managers are said to perform many tasks and play many roles. It is understood that they are responsible for handling challenging and varied situations. When it comes to effectively handling these situations, each manager employs their own management style. Some management styles should be used in some situations and some had better not be used in others. There are four main management styles considered to be practiced by managers in every industry.

Autocratic

In the autocratic style, the manager is understood to be the sole decision-maker and decisions made reflect the manager's opinion and personality. The team's collective opinion is not generally considered. If the manager has lots of experience, knowledge and exposure, the decisions made by him or her may be better and be reached faster than with collective decision-making.

Democratic

The democratic style means that the manager considers others' opinions and welcomes their contribution to the discussion. Every decision is made with the agreement of the majority and reflects the team's opinion. If this management style is going to work successfully, there had better be robust communication between the team and management. Democratic management is most successful for decision-making when it's a complex matter. Before a decision is made, usually a number of meetings take place. These meetings had better be carefully planned and details should be documented. This style of management usually results in more employee satisfaction because of the collective nature of the process.

Paternalistic

This is considered to be a dictatorial type of management. Decisions are made by the manager in the best interest of the company and its employees. This decision is then explained to the employees and generally receives their support. In this management style, a work-life balance is emphasized and the focus is on maintaining high morale in the office.

Laissez-faire

With laissez-faire management, the manager is a facilitator for staff decision-making. The employees take responsibility for their own work and make many decisions without waiting for management approval. When an employee faces an obstacle, the manager had better intervene and help the employee overcome it. In this style of management the employee is observed to be more independent and owning their decisions and the consequences.

Extension Activity

Make a presentation about the different management styles.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- In pairs, pick one of the four management styles and make a PowerPoint/Prezi presentation.
- Your presentation should describe the management style and give examples of how it is used.
- Your presentation will also describe in which situations this style of management is the most effective and when it is the least effective.
- After, write a 200-word document explaining which style you feel would be the most effective and why.

Target Words

- sole (adjective): the only one; not shared
e.g. In the autocratic style, the manager is understood to be the sole decision-maker.
- collective (adjective): shared by every member of a team
e.g. The team's collective opinion is not generally considered.
- dictatorial (adjective): having complete power over something e.g. This is claimed to be a dictatorial type of management.
- robust (adjective): not likely to have problems
e.g. If this management style is going to work successfully, there had better be robust communication.
- to document (verb): to write about something in order to record information about it e.g. These meetings had better be carefully planned and details should be documented.
- satisfaction (noun): a feeling of happiness because you have got what you wanted
e.g. This style of management usually results in more employee satisfaction because of the collective nature of the process.
- contribution (noun): something that you give or do in order to help something be successful e.g. The democratic style means that the manager considers others' opinions and welcomes their contribution to the discussion.
- morale (noun): confidence and enthusiasm felt by team members e.g. A work-life balance is emphasized and the focus is on maintaining a high morale in the office.
- facilitator (noun): someone who helps people discuss and do things effectively e.g. With laissez-faire management, the manager is a facilitator for staff decision-making.

Learning Points

Report Verbs with Impersonal Passive Constructions

When you want to avoid saying the generalized agent (they, people, everybody, etc.) of an action, you can use report verbs such as claim, mention, request, and point out with a passive structure.

You can use the structure: subject + passive reporting verb + to-infinitive

In this pattern you start with the subject of the reported clause (my brother), which is followed by the passive reporting verb (known) and the to-infinitive form of the verb (to like) in the reported clause.

For example:

Everybody knows that my brother likes watching football =
My brother is known to like watching football.

Notice that the reporting verb (to know) is in the same tense (present) in both sentences.

Examples:

- Managers are said to perform many tasks and play many roles.
- It is understood that they are responsible for handling challenging and varied situations.
- There are four main management styles considered to be practiced by managers in every industry.
- The manager is understood to be the sole decision-maker.

Learning Points

Modals for Expressing Duty and Advice: Had Better

You can use the modal phrase had better to express what is the best thing to do in a particular situation.

For example:

You're very busy. You had better ask for some help in order to complete your assignment on time.

Had better is stronger in meaning than should/ought to, but it is not as strong as must.

The negative is had better not.

For example:

We'd better not delay the delivery of this project.

Examples:

- Some management styles should be used in some situations and some had better not be used in others.
- There had better be robust communication between the team and management.
- These meetings had better be carefully planned and details should be documented.
- The manager had better intervene and help the employee overcome it.
